Overall social media
post impressions in 2018

As Brand Manager for Brewista, I rely heavily on trade magazines and their digital aspects for our marketing campaign. For nearly three years we have worked with and advertised in Fresh Cup Magazine.

Originally we began advertising with Fresh Cup simply because of their widespread reach and distribution in the specialty coffee market that is our bread and butter. During that three-year period, the staff at Fresh Cup and the services they provide have proven instrumental in our sales and marketing success. Michael Harris and Jan Weigel have consistently gone above and beyond, developing a personal relationship with my company. They take the time to analyze our business and reach out directly to inform me of opportunities from which we have greatly benefited.

Wearing a number of hats in my role, my attention is often divided and some things inevitably slip through the cracks. Recently Michael Harris reached out to me to let me know that the upcoming issue of Fresh Cup was focused on dairy alternative milks in the coffee industry. As manufacturers and distributors of the NutraMilk nut processor, Michael saw an opportunity for us to push that product. Had he not been personally familiar with the wide array of products we manufacture, he could not have brought this to my attention. We changed the artwork planned for that issue to an ad featuring the NutraMilk and got our message to readers specifically interested in dairy alternative milks.

In this day and age where we have so many options for how we market ourselves, I firmly believe that our dollars are well spent with Fresh Cup. The magazine itself is filled with applicable, targeted information that keeps readers engaged and coming back. That, coupled with their far-reaching digital content, has bolstered our sales and positively affected our bottom line.

— Christian Krause, Brewista
